What is Link Up?

Link Up, a program of Carnegie Hall's Weill Music Institute, pairs orchestras with students in grades 3–5 at schools in their local communities to explore orchestral repertoire through a hands-on music curriculum. Students participating in Link Up attend a culminating concert, in which they sing and play recorders or string instruments with the orchestra from their seats. Students also compose and perform their own pieces inspired by the orchestral repertoire studied.

Since 2003, Carnegie Hall has partnered with local, professional, community, and university orchestras to offer Link Up at sites across the United States and around the world. Through this partnership, Carnegie Hall aims to support orchestras' existing education programs, strengthen their partnerships with local schools, and provide the highest quality curricula, resources, professional development, and other support.

The Orchestra Moves

Composers create musical movement using motifs, melodic direction, steps and leaps, dynamics, and orchestration. Students discover ways in which the orchestra moves through the Link Up repertoire, hands-on activities, and a culminating interactive performance with

Repertoire Highlights:

Your school receives:

“I really like this program. It motivates my students like few other things do. I am so grateful that Carnegie Hall is helping me give a program of music to my children that makes them see themselves as real musicians. That is my motto for them: ‘You are not fourth graders playing recorders; you are musicians playing recorders.’”

What Link Up Teachers are Saying

“I absolutely love the program and feel that it has pushed my students to perform at a much higher level. [Link Up is] really a great opportunity for the kids in this area to learn recorder skills and to become familiar with our concert hall and symphony.”

—Lead Teacher,
Omaha Symphony
